Dear Sir:

I am in receipt of your letter of the 2nd inst. stating that I have been appointed lecturer in Commercial and Constitutional Law for the session 1915 and 1916. There is obviously some mistake in this. I have for some years past been giving lectures in Commercial Law and I understood that I should be appointed this year also in the subject of International Law in place of Professor Young who has resigned. The subject of Constitutional Law formerly lectured on by Professor Young was taken over by Professor Lefroy a year ago. I am enclosing my acceptance of the appointment as lecturer in Commercial Law and International Law, and I shall be glad if you will write me in due course correcting the error in your letter of the 2nd inst.

Yours truly,

(Signed) John D. Falconbridge.

Dear Mr. President:

I enclose copy of a letter from Mr. J. D. Falconbridge regarding his appointment for 1915-16. The notice communicated to him followed precisely the wording of your recommendation. Perhaps International Law was intended to be included. If so the appointment will have to be amended at a subsequent meeting of the Board.

Yours faithfully,

ENCL.

Dear Mr. Falconbridge:

I enclose you a letter which contains a difficult request. I should think, however, that you would be able to answer it in so far as it can be answered by any one, and perhaps you might give a very brief outline of what you think I might say to this lady. Kindly send me back the letter also.

Yours sincerely,

President.

Dear Mr. Falconbridge:

Many thanks for your letter which I will send to Mrs. Remington. It was good of you to take so much pains in writing at length. Also, I thank you for the pamphlet by Mr. Justice Riddell.

Yours sincerely,

President.

My dear Mr. President:-

Professor Lefroy has handed to me the book published by Houghton Mifflin Company, 4 Park Street, Boston, under the title of "International Cases" by Stowell and Munro, as the book falls rather within my subject of international law than within any of Mr. Lefroy's subjects. The book is intended as a "case-book" for use in the lecture room. While I am afraid that the time allotted to international law will not permit of the use of the book in this way, I shall be glad to refer the students to the useful and interesting collection of cases contained in it by way of illustration of the lectures. The book should be mentioned among the books of reference on the subject. As you are aware however the proof for most of the calendar for 1915- 1916 has already been read and no alteration can conveniently be made until next year. I return Houghton Mifflin Company's letter.

Yours sincerely,

John D. Falconbridge

Dear Sir:

At the suggestion of the authors we are sending you a copy of "International Cases, Volume I, Peace", by Ellery C. Stowell, Associate Professor of International Law, Columbia University and Henry F. Munro, Instructor in International Law, Columbia University.

This collection has been compiled to provide a case book for use as a text in courses in International Law. Some of the special features of this book are:

- (1) Only cases dealing with real international precedents are included and cases dealing with constitutional or administrative law are omitted.
- (2) Many of the important aspects of the peaceful relations of states are emphasized.
- (3) Cases from all the important nations have been selected.
- (4) An excellent brief account of the principal Hague Court Arbitration is given.

This case book is planned for use as the basis for class discussion in International Law.

We trust that you will be interested in examining this book and that it may prove of use in your classes in International Law.

Yours very truly,

Houghton Mifflin Company

My dear Sirs:

I am sending your letter to our Professor of International Law who will be able to determine whether or not it is a book that may be used in our work in the University of Toronto.

Yours sincerely,

President.
